

I am filing this in regard to the Do-Not-Call Act. I completely support the Act and think it is a great idea. It is extremely annoying to be receiving telemarketing calls all the time, and it is our right to be able to put our name on a list to ensure we don't get calls from them anymore. I am not educated well enough on the subject matter from what I have just read, but some things I feel you should try doing to make sure this is enforced is having severe consequences for the telemarketers if there is failure to comply to the rules you have set. I think you should have someone in your department regulating this to ensure that they are placing names on lists upon request. I don't see the reason behind telemarketers sending you an analysis of the outcome unless you have someone who is monitoring their information. I wouldn't completely trust that the telemarketers would be honest enough to have reliable information. I think that you should take away the fee for people to place their names on list. Why should we pay to not be disturbed? I think that telemarketers should not be able to call anyone unless we have purchased something previously from their company. They should be required to come up with some other way of advertising. I know I am speaking for many people when I say that we have never bought anything nor do we ever plan to do so from telemarketers over the phone. Over all I like the Act, but I would like to see it become more strict and easier to get on the list free of cost.
